PEARSON NAMES NEW CHAIRMAN:
GLEN MORENO, DIRECTOR AND FORMER CHIEF EXECUTIVE OF FIDELITY INTERNATIONAL, TO SUCCEED DENNIS STEVENSON

Edgar Filing: PEARSON PLC - Form 6-K

Pearson today announces the appointment of Glen Moreno as its new chairman. The appointment will be effective from 1 October 2005, when Dennis Stevenson will retire from the board.

Glen Moreno, 62, is the senior independent director of Man Group plc and has been a non-executive director there since 1994. He is a director of Fidelity International and chairman of its Audit Committee. He is also trustee to The Prince of Liechtenstein and Liechtenstein Global Trusts.

From 1987 to 1991 he was chief executive of Fidelity International, one of the world's most successful investment and financial information companies, recruited to lead its international expansion. Before that, he spent 18 years at Citigroup in Europe and Asia.

Dennis Stevenson said: "The Nominations Committee, led by our senior independent director Terry Burns, set out some clear criteria for our new chairman. We were looking for someone with experience of building businesses, a truly international perspective and an empathy with our culture. Glen scores very highly on all counts and I'm delighted to hand over to him. Pearson is a very special company and it has been a great privilege to play a part in its development."

Glen Moreno said: "I've followed Pearson for many years, watching with admiration as Marjorie and the team transformed it from a diverse conglomerate into a world-leading information company. I've been impressed by the experience and dedication of the people there, and by the strong growth that they are producing. I'm looking forward to working with Marjorie and the team to deliver value to customers and shareholders."

Marjorie Scardino, chief executive, added: "We've been very fortunate to have a chairman with Dennis' wisdom, intellectual curiosity, business sense and commitment to Pearson's values. Glen's record in growing businesses is perfect for this stage of Pearson's development, and we're thrilled to welcome him to Pearson."

Glen Moreno: biographical notes

Citigroup, 1969 - 1987

Over an 18-year career, Moreno held senior positions at Citigroup in Europe and Asia. During that period Citigroup became the leading international bank in Europe, developed a significant Australian business and expanded in South East Asia and India. In the early 1980s he moved to London as a member of Citigroup's Policy Committee and as group executive for investment banking, responsible for corporate finance and trading operations.

Fidelity International, 1987 - 1991

Moreno was recruited by Fidelity's owner Ned Johnson to lead the company's programme of international expansion. With his successor, Barry Bateman, he launched the company's hallmark global product range, Fidelity Funds.

Current roles

Since retiring as chief executive of Fidelity International in 1991, Moreno has held a number of roles in large international businesses. He remains a director of Fidelity International, and chairs its Audit Committee.

Edgar Filing: PEARSON PLC - Form 6-K

He has been a non-executive director of Man Group plc, the FTSE100 financial services group, since 1994, and is now the senior independent director. There he was involved in the successful demerger of Man's traditional commodities trading businesses to focus on investment management and brokerage.

He is a trustee to The Prince of Liechtenstein and Liechtenstein Global Trusts, which combines the family's banking and investment activities. LGT is a successful private banking and wealth management business in Europe, the Middle East and Asia.

He is also a governor of The Ditchley Foundation, founded in 1958 to advance Anglo-American links, which has since broadened to involve nations from all over the world.

An American national, he divides his time between the US and the UK.
