New Century Shareholder Announces Proxy Contest

Today one of our shareholders announced that it intends to nominate a competing slate of three directors for election at our next annual meeting to be held on May 10, 2006, and begin a process that is commonly referred to as a proxy contest. Several of you have asked what this means for us, so we would like to take this opportunity to summarize the implications of this proxy contest.

Like all publicly traded companies, New Century holds an annual shareholders meeting. During each annual meeting, our shareholders elect three or four directors, out of a total of 10, to our Board. In connection with this election, New Century sends to each of its shareholders a document known as a proxy statement, which identifies those people whom New Century has nominated to serve on the Board. Shareholders may vote either in person at the meeting or by filling out a proxy card that accompanies the proxy statement to indicate whether they support or withhold support from New Century's nominees. The proxy card is typically submitted to the company by mail.

A proxy contest occurs when a shareholder or group of shareholders nominates one or more directors to oppose those nominated by the company. That shareholder will also seek the proxies of New Century's shareholders to vote for its nominees; the nominees who receive the most votes win and will serve as New Century directors.

Although we are confident that our shareholders will support our nominees, it is important to note that even if the dissident slate wins the election, they will not gain majority control of New Century's Board. They would have one, two or three seats on our 10-member Board, depending on the outcome of the election.

We believe that this shareholder and its nominees intend to use their status as directors to influence the strategic direction of the company in a manner that will not be in the best interest of its shareholders. While we disagree with the filing shareholder's opinion of New Century's performance and direction, we are committed to good corporate governance practices and will continue to be receptive to all of our shareholders input. In the final analysis, the Board will continue to do what it believes is in the best interest of all of the company's shareholders.

Although the election of directors is very important, it does not change your day-to-day life at New Century. We have an ongoing commitment to our customers, and our focus needs to remain on them. This is the best way to achieve our goals as a company.

Oftentimes these types of events attract the attention of reporters and other media. Please remember to refer all media inquiries to Erin Freeman, Vice President of Corporate Communications (949-862-7624), and refrain from commenting on the matter publicly.

You can read the press release we issued today on this subject on either the Go! intranet or on ncen.com. We will keep you informed should there be any further developments related to this matter. As always, we thank you for your continued hard work and dedication.

Additional Information and Where to Find It
