Organizational Announcement

April 10, 2019

All GBC Employees,

Today we are announcing that GBC has agreed to be acquired by Wieland.

Combining our organization with Wieland, a respected global leader in the brass and copper industry for nearly 200 years, has tremendous industrial logic and allows both companies to advance critical aspects of their strategic visions more quickly together, than either could have achieved individually. Joining each company's leading, complementary capabilities is transformational, and I am excited to see what will be achieved, post-closing.

This is a significant step for us as a company, and I thank you, as an employee, for all of your contributions to our success thus far. Our focus on safety, teamwork, continuous improvement, accountability, and creating shareholder as well as customer value has been fundamental to our growth and has created this opportunity to begin a new chapter in our rich history.

While we are still sorting out various aspects of this transaction, we are committed to communicating with you on a routine basis as we advance through this process. The accompanying press release, which has just been made public, contains additional information regarding this transaction. Also, I will be hosting a conference call later today to address any immediate questions you have. Details will be emailed shortly.

Change can be challenging, especially when you are succeeding and achieving your goals. However, together, we have built an agile organization that effectively manages through change, especially change for the better. This complementary combination of GBC with Wieland creates a leader in the global brass and copper industry and that, I believe, will create tremendous opportunities for our companies, our customers, our owners, and our employees.

John Wasz

Chief Executive Officer
