MOBILE COMMUNICATIONS TO TRANSFORM SMALLHOLDING FARMERS LIVELIHOODS IN EMERGING MARKETS

Vodafone and Accenture research indicates potential $138 billion addition to developing world farmers incomes by 2020

October 10th, 2011. Vodafone and Accenture today announced the findings of a ground-breaking new research programme intended to measure the impact of mobile communications on the lives and prosperity of farming communities in some of the world's poorest countries.

The research, which has been welcomed by Oxfam, assesses the potential benefits of new mobile data services such as weather forecasts, commodity market information and mobile banking for smallholding farmers operating in marginal circumstances.

The global population is expected to reach more than 9 billion by 2050, requiring a 70% increase in food production above 2006 levels. Most of this increased yield will have to be achieved within emerging economies, many of whose farmers operate on a small scale and are highly exposed to crop failure and adverse commodity price movements.

Additionally, many farming communities in emerging markets are economically excluded with little or no access to capital or banking services. They therefore lack the means to trade (beyond basic barter arrangements), borrow to acquire new assets or invest to provide their businesses with sufficient resilience to withstand macro-economic changes.

The report, Connected Agriculture, concludes that 80% of the potential $138 billion uplift in emerging market farmers' incomes will be derived from the growth of:

- mobile money transfer systems, such as Vodafone M-PESA, which provide farmers with the ability to exchange, save and borrow small amounts of capital as well as take out short-term insurance policies;
- mobile information services providing detailed and localised weather forecasts, crop prices and resource management information; and
- helpline services giving real-time guidance on issues such as pest control and the challenges linked to climate change, including water scarcity.

Edgar Filing: VODAFONE GROUP PUBLIC LTD CO - Form 6-K

The research also concludes that a further uplift in agricultural incomes will emerge as a consequence of the use of advanced mobile communications technology in food production and distribution. This includes installing simple low-cost wireless data devices within storerooms, delivery vehicles and distribution centres to enable emerging market farmers and food producers to develop detailed logistics and tracking systems. These in turn will allow farmers and producers to optimise the movement of crops and produce from farms to consumers' homes as well as gather detailed field data.

Vodafone Group Chief Executive Officer Vittorio Colao said: 'Smallholding farmers in emerging markets are both vulnerable and vital: without a steep increase in their productivity, it is hard to see how future generations will avoid global food shortages. Mobile is already transforming hundreds of millions of people's lives in ways unimaginable only a decade ago. This report now provides vivid evidence of how mobile can make a material difference in tackling the global food gap.'

Peter Lacy, Managing Director, Accenture Sustainability Services, Europe, Africa and Latin America said: Mobile networks are now more widely established in emerging markets than traditional fixed networks and have the potential to transform market-led agricultural practices. We have identified 12 mobile communications opportunities which can drive real efficiency in food and agriculture value chains, increasing farmers' income by 11% and reducing waste and environmental impact.

Dame Barbara Stocking, Chief Executive Officer, Oxfam said: With more than 1.5 billion people worldwide dependent on smallholder agriculture - a group that includes half the world's undernourished people - mobile telephony could have significant potential to help the poorest farmers towards food and income security. We particularly welcome the focus that this research places on how core business, rather than corporate philanthropy, can operate to have a positive developmental impact.

Notes to Editors

Vodafone commissioned Accenture to undertake the research presented in Connected Agriculture, based on Accenture's expertise in the mobile telecommunications sector and its capabilities in sustainability services and solutions. Each of the 12 mobile service opportunities were modelled across 26 countries in Africa, India, Australasia, Europe and Middle East where Vodafone is present either through subsidiaries, joint ventures or associates.

The report provided the following breakdown of the principal benefits of mobile telecommunications applications:

- Mobile information services could lift incomes by $51bn and require 174 million mobile connections.
- Mobile financial services could increase incomes by $50bn based on a required 240 million mobile connections.
- Mobile agricultural trading services could generate $35bn, assuming 133 million mobile connections were established.
- Supply chain and data services could save over 2 mega tonnes of CO2 emissions and reduce food waste.

WORLD-CLASS VODACOM BUILDING ONE OF AFRICA'S GREENEST

- Vodacom achieves South Africa's first 6-star Green Star SA rated building

Vodacom, and its parent company Vodafone, have broken new ground in South Africa by achieving the first ever 6-star Green Star SA rating for the Vodafone Innovation Centre building in Midrand, Johannesburg.

This is the first time that a South African building has achieved this rating.

The Vodafone Innovation Centre will be powered by renewable energy and utilises innovative cooling and heating technologies. Once completed, the Centre will house a team of experts tasked with creating energy efficiency solutions that are expected to significantly reduce Vodafone's global emissions.

According to the Green Building Council of South Africa, a green building is a building which is energy efficient, resource efficient and environmentally responsible. It incorporates design, construction and operational practices that significantly reduce or eliminate the negative impact of development on the environment and occupants.

Pieter Uys, Vodacom CEO says: We are delighted that our building has achieved this accolade. Over the last few years, we have worked hard to reduce the Group's impact on the environment; it is a core strategic priority for both Vodafone and Vodacom. The Innovation Centre, as the hub of our creative thinking around a low-carbon future, will play a critical role in the reduction of carbon emissions across the Group.

Bruce Kerswill, Executive Chairman of the GBCSA, says that the GBCSA is proud that South Africa has its first 6-star certified building. 6-star Green Star SA is equivalent to World Leadership meaning that the Vodafone building puts South Africa firmly in line with global best practice in terms of green building this is a fantastic achievement for Vodacom and Vodafone.

Our rating systems are all about recognising excellence in sustainable design. The highest rating, six stars, is reserved for those projects that are truly world class. Vodafone has set a new South African benchmark and we are so proud that this huge international company chose South Africa for the location of this innovation centre and that they targeted, and achieved, the highest Green Star SA rating possible, concludes Kerswill.

The Vodafone Innovation Centre is expected to open in the first quarter of 2012.

Manfred Braune Technical Executive at the GBCSA says:

Edgar Filing: VODAFONE GROUP PUBLIC LTD CO - Form 6-K

The GBCSA would like to congratulate Vodafone, Vodacom and their project team on achieving the first 6 Star rating in SA – a highly commendable achievement. The design has tested and explored various cutting edge building designs and technologies in South Africa that have not yet been tested in commercial buildings – this project can become a fantastic national educational opportunity to spark further transformation in the built environment. The GBCSA encourages the project to follow this achievement up with an As Built rating, which will confirm that what was committed to in their Design rating was built, and will maximize the educational opportunities this building will have in operation.

Other certified and registered projects in SA

The green movement in the built environment is spreading like wildfire and in the last two months alone the Green Building Council of South Africa (GBCSA) has rated four new green buildings in SA under the Green Star SA rating system.

This brings the total number of certifications in SA to twelve, with two of these having achieved both Design and As Built ratings.

These innovative buildings set the standards in terms of commercial green buildings and there are many more in the pipeline which have submitted applications for Green Star Rating, says Brian Wilkinson, CEO of the GBCSA. A year ago the GBCSA had issued only one official Green Star SA rating, as opposed to the current figure of ten.

The Green Building Council of South Africa wishes to congratulate Vodafone on their new Innovation Centre and its 6-Star Green Star status, says Wilkinson. This is truly a great achievement, not only for Vodafone, but also for Green Building in South Africa in general and the GBCSA is very proud to be involved in the rating of this pioneering building.

For more information about Green Star SA, certification and professional accreditation, visit www.gbcsa.org.za or email info@gbcsa.org.za.

GBCSA contact number: 021 659 5990.

Note to editor:

Who is the Green Building Council of South Africa?

The GBCSA is an independent, non-profit, membership-based organisation that was formed in 2007 by leaders from all sectors of the commercial property industry. They are a full member of the World Green Building Council and the official certification body of buildings under the Green Star SA Rating System. The organisations primary aim is to ensure that all buildings are built and operated in an environmentally sustainable way - so that all South African s work and live in healthy, effective and productive environments.
